Let's Go Aero

The GearWagon 125 retails for $1,795 without the top or $2,995 with the lid. A sleeping platform that holds two people is also available.

Trailer adds lots of cargo space

Let's Go Aero's latest product provides 125 cubic feet of area on wheels to haul whatever owners like.

Larry Edsall / Special to The Detroit News

Sure, your sport utility vehicle has a lot of room behind its seats, but the GearWagon 125 provides nearly 125 cubic feet of cargo capacity just a few feet behind your rear bumper.

Let's Go Aero of Colorado Springs, Colo., made its name with the original GearWagon AT, an 86-cubic-foot, egg-shaped cargo trailer. The company also produces a variety of cargo and generator carriers, hitch racks and various accessories, including a Silent Hitch Pin designed to suppress vibration between a vehicle and whatever is plugged into its trailer hitch.

The company's newest products are: the Little Giant, basically a full-size pickup truck box on wheels; and the GearWagon 125, which is 11 feet long (including the tongue that connects to your trailer hitch), weighs 480 pounds and is rated at 1,000 pounds capacity. It rides on 13-inch rims wrapped by 24-inch all-terrain diameter tires.

The chassis is galvanized and power coated. The wagon has a twin-wall base made of polyethylene composite and its hard tonneau top is plastic and locks in place with a stainless steel pin lock and key system.

The tailgate is load-bearing and can be removed to use the GearWagon 125 as "toy" hauler for ATVs. Not only can it carry an ATV, but it is light enough to be pulled by one.

As many as six bicycles will stand up inside the wagon, which features Let's Go Aero's patented Hardpoint C-channel gear management system for securing what's inside. The system also accepts Nissan Titan and Frontier Utili-track bed channel accessories.

Let's Go Aero also has a line of accessories including a tent enclosure and a GearLodge sleeping platform that holds two people on a bed suspended over their gear.

The GearWagon retails for $1,795 without the top or $2,995 with the lid, excluding shipping. For information, call (877) 464-2376 or visit www.letsgoaero.com.
